

Flying Time

Flying Time.

That's what the whole project was named.

Like a fish-bird with wings and his eye is a photograph of me as a baby with my grandmother.

And then I developed that theme using different materials and meanings.

Each piece extends the narrative, shifting between the personal and the universal, the tangible and the imagined.

The delicate lines and wrinkles of my own eyes begin to mirror the surrounding landscape, as if the body itself were a terrain—marked, shaped, and continuously rewritten by time and memory.

The work on this piece inspired the following complementary works:
